Because halitosis originates in the mouth, it is virtually undetectable by your own sense of smell. You may notice a bitter, sour taste in your mouth or a whitish coating on the back of your tongue, but you generally find out there is a problem when a family member, friend or co-worker brings it to your attention. At that point, you need an effective, long-lasting and easy-to-use method of eliminating the problem. Without proper treatment, chronic bad breath can lead to a loss of confidence and self-esteem, and it can even result in depression. The problem can adversely affect your marriage, social life, career and relationship with family members. What is needed is a quick and effective treatment that works naturally with no side effects.

As a dentist with a degree in bacteriology, Dr. Katz has been keenly aware of the widespread nature of this problem. It was not until his daughter came to him about her halitosis, however, that he began to research the problem in earnest. His studies led him to an amazing discovery about the source of bad breath: it does not originate in the digestive system, and the food you eat has no direct effect on your breath.

Certain foods, however, contribute to the production of sulfurous gases in the back of the mouth. Acids in coffee and proteins in dairy products exacerbate the problem. Mints and mouthwashes intended to mask or prevent bad breath actually worsen the condition because sugar and alcohol dries out the mouth. Many common medications for everything from high blood pressure to depression have the same drying effect, resulting in the formation of odorous gases. Mucous from postnasal drip contains dense proteins that are full of sulfur. Some treatments for halitosis contain Sodium Lauryl Sulfate, which can cause canker sores. The only effective means of eliminating the sulfur gas production is to introduce oxygen to the bacteria, causing them to produce tasteless, odorless sulfates.

The majority of Indonesians find distance learning costly, especially among those with a lower socioeconomic status, a survey conducted by Saiful Mujani Research & Consulting (SMRC) has shown. The survey, which was conducted from Aug. 5 to 8 and polled 2,201 respondents across the country, found that only 6 percent of respondents said they did not find distance learning costly.

"Among respondents with family members carrying out distance learning, 67 percent them said it was very or quite costly," SMRC public policy manager Tati Wardi said in a virtual presser on Tuesday. Tati said the government should pay attention to this issue as students had been forced to study from home for months during the COVID-19 pandemic.

The survey showed that the higher a person's education, the lower the tendency to state that distance learning was quite or heavily costly, and the higher a person's income, the lower the tendency to state that it was costly. "These findings indicate a crucial problem regarding the right to education and its relation to socioeconomic status. Those with higher incomes do not see it as a heavy burden, but it doesn't apply to the poor. The government needs to respond to this gap."

Avery continued to maintain his innocence in the Beerntsen case. In 2002, after serving 17 years, the Wisconsin Innocence Project used DNA testing — not available at the time of Avery's original trial — to exonerate him, and to demonstrate that Allen had in fact committed the crime. Allen, who bore a striking physical resemblance to Avery, had committed an assault at the same beach where Beerntsen was attacked in 1983, but he was never a suspect in the Beerntsen case, and was not included in the photo or live lineups presented to Beerntsen.
