This passage is for the question number 1 – 10.

Some Indonesians may miss something when their meal does not come up with chilies or chili chunks. The hottest ones are the most sought after by chili lovers. Not just spicy, chilies turn out to contain some important nutrients such as energy, carbohydrates, sugar, fiber, fat, protein, vitamin A, vitamin B6, vitamin C, iron, magnesium, potassium, water, and capsaicin. Capsaicin is what makes chili taste spicy and hot. Despite its spicy taste, chilies turn out to have many health benefits.

The first benefit of chilies is for stomach health. Capsaicin in chilies can nourish the digestion by increasing the digestive juices in the stomach and fighting bacteria that cause infection. In addition, chilies also help fight diarrhea caused by bacterial infections.

Chilies can also reduce pain. Applying an ointment or cream containing capsaicin is thought to help reduce soreness, pain after surgery, migraines, psoriasis, thrush due to chemotherapy or radiation, joint problems such as rheumatoid arthritis and osteoarthritis, nervous system problems such as diabetic neuropathy, sudden and sharp pain in one side of the face, and nerve pain the area of the body infected with chickenpox virus. In addition, capsaicin is also thought to reduce back pain, muscle and soft tissue pain in fibromyalgia, relieve symptoms of prurigo nodularis skin disease, and relieve symptoms of runny noses that are not associated with allergies or infections. Capsaicin works by first stimulating and then reducing the intensity of pain in the body. That is why when applying a cream containing capsaicin, we will feel the pain, but the pain will usually subside after the first use.

The other benefit of chilies is that they are believed to be able to strengthen lung tissues and help prevent or treat chronic lung diseases where the small air sacs in the lungs are damaged by smoking. In addition, chilies also thin the mucus in the lungs so that it can be easily removed from the lungs.

According to research in China, a long term consumption of capsaicin is thought to reduce blood pressure levels. In addition, other studies also reveal that capsaicin is thought to reduce cholesterol and prevent blood clots causing heart disease.

This passage is for the question number 11 – 20.

“Mental health” refers to how people think, feel and act as they face life’s situations. Our mental health affects how we handle stress, relate to one another and make decisions. And mental health influences the way individuals look at themselves, their lives and others in their lives. Like physical health, mental health is important at every stage of life.

All aspects of our lives are affected by our mental health, and protecting our children’s mental health is a natural part of our parental obligation. Caring for our children—emotionally as well as physically—is unimportant to their daily lives and their independence.

Like adults, children and adolescents can have mental health disorders that interfere with the way they think, feel and act. When untreated, mental health disorders can lead to school failure, family conflicts, drug abuse, violence and even suicide. Untreated mental health disorders are often very costly to families, communities and the health care system.

Studies show that at least 1 in 5 children and adolescents have a mental health disorder at any given time. Yet, fewer than one in five of these children receive the mental health services they need. Among young people, at least 1 in every 10 has a serious emotional disturbance at any given time.
